Speaking in Tongues

The origin and progression of the the protestant doctrine of cessationism as it relates to speaking in tongues.

Pentecost
Understood as a miraculous ability to speak one or more foreign languages.

Tongues as a miracle of hearing is not emphasized in protestant works.

The death of tongues shortly after the first Pentecost theory arose around 200 AD.

John Chrysostom (349 – 407)
This Church Father once wrote that the gift of tongues no longer operated during his time but this is not consistent among his homilies.
Chrysostom is the most quoted ancient writer on the subject.

The first Pentecost was a temporary phenomenon that remained with those disciples until they died. It was never passed on.

Cyril of Alexandria (376 – 444)
We are not sure whether Cyril or Didymus wrote this text.

Didymus the Blind (310 – 398)

Augustine Bishop of Hippo (354 – 430)
The church had taken over the role of tongues, speaking in every language to all the nations.

Thomas Aquinas supported Augustine's position in the 1200s but it didn't take hold.

Catholic history would show many examples of continuants during this period.

For over the next 1,100 years, this doctrine is mostly forgotten.

ignore (1100+ years later. . .)

1517 AD. The start of the Reformation.
The Protestants didn't like the Roman Catholic practice of miracles. Too much, too often, too overused. Luther argued that most miracles ceased in the early church.

Jean Calvin (1509 – 1564) He too, like Luther supported that special revelation ceased in the early church. He strongly frowned against the abuse of miracles, especially anything related to catholic expressions. He had a limited view of miracles.

The Church of England
The doctrine of Cessationism begins here.

The Church of England is neutral but its Puritan sect is strongly cessationist.

Westminster Confession (1647)
The first time cessation of miracles added to a confession of faith.

ADVICE ASSEMBLY DIVINES

Anti-Catholicism was a standard feature of early cessationism

Rationalists/Deists
Thomas Hobbes, John Locke, Conyers Middleton, David Hume, etc.

Richard Hooker (1554 – 1600) Anglican Priest and theologian who combined faith with reason.

Laditudinarians
A small movement that emphasized an alliance of science and religion. Often were at odds against the puritan thinkers.

Isaac Newton a part of this group that allowed for miracles.

Conyers Middleton (1683–1750)
He wrote a critical evaluation against historic church miracles.

Princeton Theological Seminary This Presbyterian school became the center of cessationist doctrine in the late 1800s early 1900s.

B. B. Warfield
This Princeton theologian's work, Counterfeit Miracles, (1918) set the modern standard for the doctrine.

This set the doctrine of cessationism at the forefront.

John MacArthur
Pastor, radiohost, and author, is the leading proponent of cessationism today.

Bible Colleges and Seminaries.* Cessationism was standard for conservative christian higher education in the 1900s.
